

CONCEPTS AND ROLES IN COMMUNITY RELATIONS

The Board of Education recognizes that local communities served by the public schools may contribute to the number available and quality of educational programs. Therefore, it is imperative that community members work with and support school staff in developing sound educational policies, implementing programs, and establishing effective evaluation procedures for these programs.

School-community relations can be characterized as a partnership in pursuit of excellence. This partnership consists of community members and professional educators working together in the best interests of the schools and the students.
