September 23, 2026 The Difference Between Us

The first hour of the series shows that despite what we've always believed, the world's peoples simply don't come bundled into distinct biological groups.

The invention of race is only a few hundred years old, and the history and evolution of the idea are deeply tied to the development of the U.S.

We focus on the ways our institutions and policies invisibly accrue advantages to some due to the racialized nature of our laws, customs, and housing.
